Wellness-Focused Design at Studio Apostoli

Since its launch in 1997, the philosophy at Studio Apostoli has been “wellness, first of all”.

According to the Verona-based Italian studio, this philosophy is applied to architecture, interiors and product design sectors around the world where it exports its projects, including the United States, Russia, the Middle East, China and elsewhere in Europe.

It highlights “a plurality of declinations: well-being as compositional harmony, as experiential quality, as technological perfection, as sustainable aim, as choice and use of appropriate materials, as capacity to understand the context and make it as a long-term economic feasibility program”.

The company has a team of 60 professionals specialising in distinctive areas and following the holistic and interdisciplinary approach of its founder, Alberto Apostoli. His aim, says Studio Apostoli, was to create a professional group capable of going far beyond traditional rules of architectural design”. Over more than 20 years, Studio Apostoli has carried out over 1,000 projects including hotels, spas, offices, shops, residential complexes and villas, providing architectural, engineering and interior design, as well as conceiving furnishings, products and accessories, designed specifically for each project.

“From large to small scale, well-being is therefore expressed through an integrated design methodology and evolves continuously, thanks to the technological innovations and the international experiences gained by the firm.”

Alberto Apostoli has also communicated his knowledge through conferences and educational activities, including philosophical, historical, economic, sociological and artistic.
